A second dispatch from Gen. Terry to Gen. Sheridan of the same date says:

"On the evening of the 28th we commenced moving down with the wounded, but were able to get but four miles, as our hand litters did not answer the purpose. The mule litters did excellently well, but they were insufficient in number. The 29th therefore was spent in making a full supply of them. On the evening of the 29th we started again, and at 2 o'clock a. m. our stubborn leader will, no doubt, fight it out on this line, a la Grant, all summer. He is a brigadier general, and his scalp jought to be proportionately precious, according to military ideas. If he is willing to risk in hair and bushwhack around this region, and further on, for several months started again, and at 2 o'clock a m. our wounded were placed on a steamer at the factories of the Sahair and bushwhack around this afternoon of the Soth they were brought down to a depot on the Yellowstone. I will seed them to-morrow by steamer to Fort Lincoln, and with them one of my aids Capt. E. W. Smith. I have brought down to a make the point, they arrived to-night. They need refitting, particularly in the matter of transportation, before starting again, although I had on the steamer a good supply of subsistence and forage. There are other things that we need, and I should hesitate to trust the beat again in the Big Horn.
